September 05, 2010. 23rd Sunday in Ordinary Time.

The Rev. Gregory Mludzik, Pastor.

Raymond Bielski, Parish Chairman Dawn Wassman, Music Minister

In a computerized society we stress the value of planning and calculation. The computer helps the human mind to make quick and prudent decisions. Does calculation have a place in interhuman relationships, or, on a higher level, in the way human beings decide to style their lives as related to God and religion?

Biblical persons did not know the computer, but they did know about wisdom and prudence. Even if we speak of love, dedication, and faith, the element of prudence must be there! Intuitive and emotional decisions are sometimes feasible and even heroic. But, as a rule, we must sit down, apply wisdom and prudence, and even calculate our resources. The first and third Scripture readings deal with prudence and even calculation.

QUESTIONS FOR REFLECTION

For the corruptible body burdens the soul and the earthen shelter weighs down the mind.

Imagine the people in your life as moons.

- How much of their surface is visible to you, and how much is cast in shadow?

I am sanding, that is, my own heart, back to you.

- Which categories of persons are hardest for our society to look beyond?

“Anyone of you who does not renounce all his possessions cannot be my disciple.”

- How do you “renounce” people and things even while you remain among them?

Faith Response

Simplify the claims on your allegiance. Start the winnowing process in prayer, identifying the things and relationships that keep you from following Jesus. Next, strive to eliminate the power of these "other masters" over your life.
